Rep. Doug Lamborn, R-
Colorado

Colorado Congressman Doug Lamborn has apologized to President Barack Obama publicly for what he says "some" people could perceive as a racially insensitive comment.

Reaction in Hudson County

Lamborn was interviewed on a Denver radio station and was speaking about not wanting to be associated with Obama when he added "It's like touching a tar baby and you get it, you're stuck, and you're a part of the problem now and you can't get away. I don't want that to happen to us, but if it does or not, he'll still get, properly so, the blame because his policies for four years have failed the American people."

Heck, most people would call that a racial slur.

Lamborn now says he meant to use the word "quagmire," but that's a bit late.

While he has engaged in damage control, wordsmiths are debating the origin and meaning of the term "tar baby." It's meant to signify a sticky situation that one cannot solve. Sen. McCain and Mitt Romney both used the term, in public in the past few years, but neither was referring to people.

Let's just say it's better to avoid the phrase altogether.

His colleagues in Washington D.C. have been relatively quiet on the matter, even though black leaders and others have denounced the comment.
